

Globalization Processes and Its Impact on Uzbeki Culture

Turdiyev Ma'mur Rustamovich

Teacher of the Department of History of Tashkent University of Applied Sciences

Abstract. In this article, the place and role of the processes of globalization in the development of humanity as a person and in the life of society, the philosophical factors of the process of globalization, its impact and significance on culture are highlighted.

Key words: Philosophy, globalization, civilization, culture, humanism, immunity, spirituality, threat, public, national, value

Enter. At a time when globalization is the most important factor in the development of society, culture and spirituality serve as a special stage in human development. Because in the processes of globalization, we can say that cultural development is not only for the future of the nation, but also a process that shows its past. If we consider the processes of globalization as the most important development factor of the present time, this process occupies a special place not only in science, but also in the economic and political processes of a highly developing country and in the literal philosophical maturity. The process of globalization, its phenomenon and the impact of imagination on people are expanding through the development of the century. The original goal and purpose of the phenomenon of globalization, which includes a wide range of complex social, economic and political processes, from our simple way of life and thinking to our social behavior and relations, from our daily material needs and interests to our internal and external political-economic relations, is philosophical. As we begin to understand its essence, the interest in realizing and understanding its original essence increases again. Globalization also affects national spirituality. If we consider that any policy, including economic policy and policy in the field of spirituality, will bring success only if it has a scientific basis, we have to admit that our scientists provide sufficient support to our politicians in this matter. If we want our country's policy in the world arena to be more effective and successful, it is necessary to deeply research and analyze the nature, directions, and characteristics of globalization.

Analysis of literature on the topic. Globalization processes are of great importance to the cultural development of people and their development as a society and nation. It is globalization that is of primary importance in the wide popularization of every philosophical process on a global scale or among the people. The reason is that through this process, national spirituality, threats to its identity, freedom of thought, development factors of our development, awareness of national identity and the feeling of being worthy descendants of worthy ancestors develop in every person. Also, globalization is the strengthening of interaction and connection between the economy, culture, spirituality, and people of different countries. There are many definitions of globalization. But we think that the description given by the French researcher B. Bandi fully covers its features. It emphasizes that globalization is three-dimensional according to the development and impact factors:

- globalization is a continuous historical process;
- globalization - the process of homogenization and universalization of the world;
- globalization is the process of "washing away" of national borders.

In the processes of globalization, philosophy and its development are very important. Philosophy reflects not only the age-old problems and worries of man, but also his daily practice of real life, which is changing at an increasingly rapid pace in recent years under the influence of scientific and technical progress, including on a global scale. In this regard, new phenomena, unusual difficulties and special conditions are attracting the attention of both scientists and philosophers. In this, the advantage of philosophy over science is that it does not cling to details and certain facts in its conclusions, it easily ignores some trivial and transient things, which allows it to focus on the essence of the work, the most important factors of development and the main allows recording processes. These qualities of philosophy are of particular importance in the present conditions, when a person is forced to solve complex, complex tasks arising in the system of social relations or the "society-nature" system. In this regard, the methods and methods of philosophical analysis, distinguishing important things from secondary things, legal things from random things, and the difference between objective processes and subjective factors in historical development, are especially important for theoretical understanding and practical elimination of universal problems faced by humanity today. becomes less important. Due to the fact that its influence on the economy, politics and spirituality of different countries is even more complex, two competing groups have emerged in the world: globalist and anti-globalist groups. Evaluating "globalization" only as a negative phenomenon and opposing it can lead to the denial of various natural and social connections in social life. The process of globalization should be free from "ideology", its goals. The analysis shows that both supporters and enemies of globalism focus on the economy. The impact of globalization on spirituality and issues of spiritual globalization should be sufficiently reflected in sociology, philosophy, and cultural anthropology. Of course, it is difficult to fully cover even the most basic aspects and directions of globalization. Therefore, in this section, we will only think about globalization and the impact that globalization has and can have on national spirituality.

Finding global problems, their solutions, and thereby adapting the globalization process to the modern development, correctly evaluating each process based on the needs of people is a very necessary and fundamental issue. The development of science Science has always helped people to solve difficult and complex tasks. Most of the things that once seemed unattainable, beyond the level of human capabilities, have been achieved with the help of science. For this reason, the very first warnings about the threat of global problems forced people to turn their attention to science, and scientists to look for ways to solve these problems. The uniqueness and novelty of the situation is that if any specific problems can be studied within the framework of some science or a set of several sciences, then man, society and nature can be studied in their numerous interactions and interactions. Some sciences are not capable of researching global problems consisting of a complex system that covers in its dependencies. Because the scope of certain sciences is narrow to interpret the object of their research - this or that particular problem in the context of other global problems. Therefore, regardless of what specific tasks this or that science solves, a philosophical approach to the processes and events related to them, that is, to the whole situation, including the results obtained in the end, is always a necessary condition of research. Any certain sciences at a certain stage need a philosophical understanding of the subject of their research to one degree or another. Without such a broad approach to a specific subject of science and the problems facing humanity, neither fundamental discoveries nor the development of science in general is possible. Thus, in this case, on the one hand, there is a question about the philosophical solution of problems, and on the other hand, about the fact that philosophy encourages the interaction of a wide range of sciences, in which their interdisciplinary integration plays an important role. is conducted. Although there is an opinion that philosophy studies extremely general issues that are far removed from the daily life and practice of people, it is philosophy that plays an important role in solving global problems. After all, it is well known that general theories can sometimes be more effective than most specific fields of knowledge. Of course, it would not be far-fetched to say that philosophy inevitably and directly influences political and other decision-making.

Conclusions and suggestions. Philosophy, while forming a worldview, gives certain goals that determine the direction of human activity in many ways. In this way, philosophy fulfills its worldview formation and axiological functions, its lack of a comprehensive vision of the complex systems studied within the framework of various sciences is a serious obstacle to the mutual cooperation of these sciences. In this sense, the methodological function of philosophy, which summarizes the theories that arise within the scope of this science, is especially important, because it helps the integration of scientific knowledge. Such a philosophy allows explaining social events and processes in a historical context. It describes the general laws of the development of society and nature, and therefore, in the study of global problems, it leads to understanding them as a legal phenomenon inextricably linked with social development. Thus, the emergence of global problems is considered not as an accident or a judgment of fate that predestined humanity to destruction, but as a product of the objective development process of human history, full of contradictions. At the same time, philosophy makes it possible to understand the general trend of the development of global problems from a philosophical point of view, the level of their interrelationship and mutual dependence, and through this, philosophy fulfills a spiritual and cultural function by creating an opportunity for the development of a culture of theoretical thinking. Studying the history of philosophy of different peoples allows you to get acquainted with their culture. It is impossible to solve any of the global problems facing certain nations without connecting them to their culture. Also, the main feature is that philosophy puts the issues of the meaning of human life, death and eternity on the agenda, which is especially important in the conditions of global problems threatening humanity. Finally, another important methodological function of philosophy is that it is directly related to the current important problems of humanity and plays a huge role in understanding and realizing the objective trends of human development: "nature", "society", "civilization"., "social development", "science and technology revolution" develops other categories. Philosophical approach to the study of global problems of the present time fulfills the main task in the study, analysis and conclusion of the time when it is developing in every way.

BOOKS

1. I.A. Karimov. High spirituality is an invincible power. Tashkent; Spirituality, 2008
2. Q. Khonazarov "Globalization and the philosophy of language" T. 2009
3. Ochildiev A. Globalization and ideological processes. - T. 2009
4. Otamuratov S. Globalization and nation. - T., New century generation, 2008
5. Umarov B. Conflicts of globalization. - T.: Spirituality, 2006